The present invention generally relates to anti-fuse and MOS-gated transistors and, more particularly, to a novel and highly effective MOS-gated anti-fuse and a method for its manufacture. In U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,823,181, 4,816,758, and 4,677,427 the use of anti-fuses is described for electrically programming or reprogramming defective integrated circuit memory devices. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,823,181, an array of anti-fuses is described consisting of a single level of aluminum and two levels of polysilicon which are located adjacent to one another without being separated by an insulator material. The polysilicon layers are oxidized to form a thermal oxide. Each anti-fuse is then formed by opening the aluminum layer at a location dictated by the binary input data of the integrated circuit memory array. The polysilicon layer is then selectively etched to open a window through the oxide to the aluminum layer. The window is then filled with an amorphous silicon, e.g., polycrystalline silicon, which is then furnace recrystallized. This provides the electrically conductive polysilicon/silicon link for programming the anti-fuse. U.S. Pat. No. 4,816,758 also describes an array of anti-fuses which are programmed by opening the aluminum layer of each fuse by means of a laser or other suitable means. U.S. Pat. No. 4,677,427 describes a cross-point metal-polysilicon anti-fuse comprising a polysilicon layer and a metal layer located directly below the polysilicon layer. The polysilicon layer overlies a first metal layer. The first metal layer is spaced from the polysilicon layer by a second metal layer. The second metal layer overlies a first insulating layer. The first insulating layer overlies the first metal layer and the second metal layer. The polysilicon layer is connected to the second metal layer. The first metal layer is connected to the second metal layer and the second metal layer is connected to a programming voltage source. The use of polysilicon as the gate material in MOS-gated anti-fuses is also described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,624,383, and German Patent No. 3,706,166. Anti
